State Street Farmers Market Website Now Features Weekly Blog

Couldn't get to the market this weekend, but would like to know what is going on? Check out the new farmers market blog. Each week you can find a blog post featuring market activities such as, what produce is available and local entertainers who are performing. Community "foodies" can find out which chef was at the market this week or when the next Chef at the Market is going to take place, or maybe find a new recipe offered by one of the farmers.

Whatever your reason, the market blog is a great place to keep up with "what is growing on at the market." The blog may be found on the State Street Farmers Market website, where you can find all types of information regarding market activities. The website features things like the top 10 reasons to shop the farmers market, and a list of new ways to enjoy your time at the market. You can even print a coloring book for your children or grandchildren right from the site. Market events are featured along with a photo gallery that includes farmers and market patrons. There is something for everyone on the site, so check it out at: www.statestreetfarmersmarket.com and while you are there don't forget to check out the new blog.

Remember to pick up your June market print available now!
